Grammar

Sentence Structure:

Standard:

- [Adjective]-[Number]-[Subject]-[Object]-[Adverb]-[Verb]
- [Preposition]-[Noun]

Question:

- [Verb]-[Question]-[Subject]-[Object]

Phonemic Restrictions:

Any phrase that would require more than two letters (/kg/ being [ccc]) does not exist.

[ou] sounds like /æo/ at the end of a word, at any other time, it is pronounced /w/

[ouiu] is pronounced /wiu/, not /wj/

[iuou] is pronounced /jæo/, not /jw/

Noun Suffixes

Type	Suffix	Example
Possessive	-os	(Dog -> Dog's)
Plural	-(e)j*	(Dog -> Dogs)
Time	-(e)t*	(Place - > Event)
Every	-e	(Cat -> Every cat)

* only uses (e) form when with the same letter. E.g. aj -> ajej, ac, acj

Verb Suffixes

Tense	Suffix	Example
None	Ø	to like
Present		like
Present Perfect	-u	liking
Past Simple	-o	liked
Past Perfect		had liked
Past Imperfect	-om	was liking
Past Continuous		had been liking
Future Simple	-i	will like
Future Perfect		will have liked
Future Imperfect	-im	would have liked
Future Continuous		would have been liking
Becomes Adjective	-ot	rot → rotten

About

The word "about" isn't used because it is assumed when talking about the object. You can use "of" or "from" for specification if needed

Post-World Words

If a word has a hyphen ("-"), it was not in the original language before Jac came to Earth.

Adjective -> Noun

Turning a noun into an adjective is done by lowercasing the capital letter.

Punctuation

. = declaration

¿? = question

¡! = exclamation

ji!! = anger

zi! = surprise

- Note to advanced language readers: you might see some patterns in the language that seem to use cool techniques to form words (Such as ouem + jimi = ouejim). I'm not smart enough to know what this is called, and I don't want it to be consistent, so I'm going to leave out suggesting that there's c -> g reduction or anything. Thanks!
